Secrets of the Movies Revealed

Q—What new departure in the movies will mark Rupert Hughes' picture "The Bitterness of Sweets?"

A—The completed picture "The Bitterness of Sweets" will have no subtitles, if it is at all possible to do without them. At any rate they will be so rare as to be scarcely noticeable. Mr. Hughes hopes that no subtitles will be necessary, for the ideal photoplay is one that has no subtitles.

Q—What does a veteran cameraman declare to be important phases of movie photography?

A—Lighting and shading. The lights and shades, he affirms, help to convey the spirit of the play and to indicate emotion.

Q—What very delicate bit of photographing is shown in a film devoted to movie people and studios?

one scene in four of her best roles. The quadruple exposure is done so perfectly that the eye cannot detect the joining lines.

Q—How many square feet of canvas were used to cover the banquet hall set in Fairbanks' "Robin Hood?"

A—More than 24,000 square feet were used.

Q—What two movie actors are at law over a horse?

A—George Walsh is suing Tom Mix for $50,000 alleging that Mix refused to return a horse Walsh lent him.

What new invention may make the movies as commonplace as the phonograph, radio, and piano?

The information is contained in the answer which will be published tomorrow.

Calif. for Metro's production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," now at the Orpheum theater. This army differed from others that have been used in mimic battles for the screen, in that every officer and private enlisted in it saw service abroad.

"We were enabled to put on a more authentic reproduction of the second battle of the Marne than ever before has been attempted in battle pictures," said Director Ingram. "Some of the men participated in the battle that proved the turning point of the war."

"Incidentally, it was necessary to give these men the drilling that usually is required to prepare the raw recruit for the most important part before the camera. They were able to take military orders and they were amenable to discipline. The satisfactory result of our immense military organization work was due to the aid given us by the corps of experts we used in this connection."

June Mathis, who prepared the picture version of the book, made repeated visits to the Metro ranch outside of Los Angeles, where a French village was reproduced as a background for the battle scenes.

BLACKSTONE

There's snow and ice in the picture "The Girl From Porcupine" which is at the Blackstone today. That in itself will be welcome news, in addition to the fact that the picture is one of the best and thrilling pictures of the great Northwest that has come out of that country in a long time. Faire Blinney is the featured player.

Wallace Reid, supported by a hundred pounds of supreme loveliness in the person of Lois Wilson, comes Sunday in a new knock-out picture "The World's Champion."

LASALLE

"The Duke of Chimney Butte" which is at the Lasalle today and which brings to the screen Fred Stone, king of laugh makers, has a most unusual plot. Just imagine if you can a callow youth falling head over heels in love with a girl (blonde) he had caught one glimpse of as she whizzed past on the observation platform of a train. And this youth determined to find and meet that girl no matter what the cost. The doing of it takes him through some of the most amazing and laughable adventures. On Sunday Monroe Salisbury in "The Great Alone" is the Lasalle attraction.

CASTLE

Lasalle crowds who saw Alice Lake and Conrad Nagel in "Hate" Thursday and Friday pronounced it an exceptionally good crook drama. It's at the Castle today. On Sunday Fred Stone in "The Duke of Chimney Butte" will hand out laugh and thrills.

AUDITORIUM

Holmes E. Herbert, often called "the aristocrat of the screen," heads the all-star cast in "The Family Closet," shown today at the Auditorium theater. It was adapted from Will Payne's Saturday Evening Post story, "Black Sheep." On the same bill is the newest of the Hallroom Boys comedies, called "Nobody's Baby," also the latest edition of Fox News, which closes the bill. Sunday brings William Duncan and Edith Johnson in "The Silent Vow," a stirring story of the great Canadian Northwest.

ORPHEUM

Mobilization of the biggest army ever organized for motion picture purposes took place in Hollywood,

TO TRY FRED MADER DESPITE HIS OFFER

CHICAGO, June 9.—(By U. P.)—The trial of Fred Mader, head of the Chicago building trades council, proceeded today in spite of his offer to plead guilty and accept a fine for conspiracy.

to obtain graft from building owners. If found guilty he is subject to $2,000 fine or five years in prison. The prosecution refused to compromise.

M. J. Doolan, the first to be tried on charges of tampering with juries in trials of labor leaders, was acquitted yesterday.
